Self-Advocates On A Roll!

What is a self-advocate? All over the country people are answering this question the same way.

"A self-advocate is someone who speaks up for himself or herself."

Self-advocates speak their minds about many things. It can mean...

- Speaking up in a simple chat or conversation with a friend.
- Speaking up in a restaurant to place an order.
- Speaking up in a shoe store to pick out some cool shoes.
- Speaking up to tell people where you want to live or work, or about the services you need.

People are speaking up more and more everywhere. Self-advocates just want to live the life they want. It's pretty simple!

People don't have to speak up with spoken words.

People also speak up with sign language and in other ways too. Pay attention and watch. You'll see!

Self-advocates are also joining together to get things done like never before. When self-advocates speak up together they can have a very loud voice. Think about it. A loud voice can change lots of things.

Self-advocates are speaking to mayors and governors. They are speaking to state legislators too. Some are speaking with US Senators and Congressmen.

Self-advocates are on a roll! Read all about it inside The Riot!.

The Riot! Speaks Out Against SPAM

Recently, many of our readers received strange emails from someone claiming to be from The Riot! These emails were ads to buy watches, medicines and other stuff. The spam emails did not come from The Riot! They were sent by a spammer who pretended to be from the Riot! This is called "getting spammed." We were spammed!

We think we fixed the problem.

We added more safeguards to prevent Spam.

You will still get The Riot! emails, but they will be sent from a new address. Please contact us if you continue to receive strange emails claiming to be from The Riot!

Thank you for your patience.

Hello readers. It's time to celebrate! Self-advocates are speaking up across the nation and making change! They are challenging silly rules, supporting each other to live better lives, and working with legislators to make new laws.

Everyone knows we've been saying "No more R word." This year self-advocates across the nation put action behind this demand by writing respectful language legislation.

This past month, our Governor in Arkansas signed into law a respectful language bill and we're going to celebrate!

Like self-advocacy groups across the country, Arkansas People First has worked long and hard on this bill. I realize some states have passed bills in recent years. Self-advocates in those states are the leaders we look up to.

We can also ask them for help.

When Arkansas People First was in the process of writing our bill, we asked People First of Washington for advice. This is a great example of how self-advocates in different states can work together to get things done.

In 2008, SABE will be celebrating the National Conference in Indianapolis! There is not a date yet, but it will be in the fall. Start saving so you can join us in the race for self-advocacy in Indianapolis!

Finally, I have a personal reason to celebrate. I am joining the HSRI staff. I will be working on many different projects wherever my expertise can be used the best. HSRI has worked with many great self-advocates over years. I am happy to join the team!

Rocky's Rap

Self-advocates all over the country are becoming leaders and making changes to improve their lives. Being a leader means listening to what people want, helping people to speak up for themselves, and speaking up for others. This is the best way to make change.

I learned how to be a leader by going to People First meetings and conferences. Eventually, I became Secretary and then Vice President of my local chapter. Later, I was elected Chapter President for about four years. Now, I am President of Montana People First.

Over the years, I've learned that good leaders treat others the way they want to be treated and support others to reach their goals.

I've also learned that everyone needs some kind of support. Ask for support when you need it.

If you want to make change in your life or your community, try to do it. Keep working until you reach your goals.

It's very important to be a leader in your own life. Nothing will change if you don't try.

Rocky Hughes

Rocky Hughes is President of Montana People First and lives in Kalispell, Montana.

Self-Advocates are taking the lead

Self-advocates around the country are working together to make change in their own lives and in their states. They are making change by:

Supporting each other to have the life they want, to be healthy, and learn about their rights.

Writing legislation to get rid of hurtful language like the "R" word in state agency names, language, and written documents;

Challenging Silly Rules that control people and keep them down; and Making self-advocacy stronger by starting new groups and getting more members.

Supporting Each Other

In California, the Pathfinders program employs self-advocate "Lifeguides" to help other self-advocates create a "Life Plan" for how they want to live their lives. Service coordinators make sure that services and supports are provided according to an individual's Plan.

Ted Cottini has been a Lifeguide for about three years. When he visits with self-advocates, he asks them a lot of questions about things like what they like and their goals. A Life Plan "is really up to the individual," says Ted.

Most people want to get a driver's license, a new job, or a new place to live in the community. Last year, Ted and five other Lifeguides helped over 280 self-advocates living in Redding and Chico develop Life Plans.

In North Carolina, self-advocates support each other to set their own health goals and achieve them! The self-advocacy group Real Advocates Now Emerging leads a project called "Be Well! Feel Fit!" in the Carrboro area. Using a "peer support" approach, self-advocates help other self-advocates to eat well, exercise, stay safe, have good relationships, and feel great about themselves.

People First of Oklahoma and the Oklahoma Disability Law Center worked together to teach self-advocates about their voting rights.

Law Center staff train self-advocates to teach others about voting rights. Then, People First members visit people living in big places called "ICF/MRs" to teach them about their voting rights. So far, about 100 people living in ICF/MRs have registered to vote in the past 2 years!

Writing Legislation

People First of Connecticut members are working on two bills to get rid of the "R" word! For the second year in a row, they have submitted a respectful language bill. If passed, the bill will stop the "R" word from being used to describe people with intellectual disabilities.

The organization has also been working on the name change bill. This bill would change the name of the Department of Mental Retardation to the Department of Developmental Services. These two bills are currently being considered in legislative committees.

Meanwhile, People First got rid of the "R" word in the Hartford Courant newspaper! After reading an article that used the "R" word many times, Chad Sinanian of People First wrote a letter to the paper. He convinced the Courant to use People First language when writing about people with disabilities from now on.

Missouri People First wants to get rid of the "R" word too. They want to take the "R" word out of the name of the state disability agency with Senate Bill 621. If passed, this bill would change the agency's name to the Division of Developmental Disabilities.

People First conducted a survey about the name change. Of 458 people surveyed, 402 people said they want the name changed!

People First is also working with others to bring the "Medicaid Buy-In" program back. This would allow people with disabilities to work without losing Medicaid healthcare benefits that make living and working possible.

The Texas Advocates are working on a bill with others to start a self-determination pilot project. If the bill passes, 50 self-advocates will get to control their services and supports. The project will demonstrate how self-directed services and supports work.

Supporters of the bill hope the project will convince the state to write a self-determination waiver in 2008. A new waiver would give people control of their services and allow providers to offer services that people want. The current waivers limit what providers can do and limit choices that self-advocates can make about their lives.

Challenging Silly Rules

People First of Montana discovered that "There are too many silly rules keeping self-advocates down!"

Good rules keep people safe and help people do things the right way. But silly rules don't make sense and keep people from living the lives they choose. For example, "No dating" is one silly rule that they found.

People First members interviewed self-advocates living in group homes around the state to create a long list of silly rules. Now, they have a plan to get rid of silly rules.

People First has asked for support from groups and organizations that can help them convince providers to change the rules. They have started asking providers to get rid of their silly rules.

Rocky Hughes, State Chapter President, said that staff generally agree about silly rules. "Right now we're taking a step back to see what will happen."

Meanwhile, self-advocacy organizations from other states are interested in the Montana Silly Rules project. They may start similar projects of their own!

Growing Self-Advocacy

In Idaho, what began as a project to educate people about self-directed supports is a state-wide self-advocacy movement!

With support from the Idaho Council on Developmental Disabilities, self-advocate leaders across the state are organizing the first ever statewide self-advocacy organization. The Idaho Self-Advocate Leadership Network is working to grow their membership and become a nonprofit organization.

The Network's goals are to (1) reach self-advocates statewide, (2) improve the lives of self-advocates, and (3) influence state policies that affect the lives of people with disabilities.

The Illinois Self-Advocates in the Lead project is funded by the Illinois Council on Developmental Disabilities. The project is led by 16 self-advocate leaders from around the state. These leaders will travel all over Illinois to talk to self-advocates about issues that are most important in their lives. The group will use this information to develop a plan to grow the self-advocacy movement across the state.

In South Dakota, self-advocate leaders are working to build partnerships, spread the word, and grow a self-advocacy movement across the state. Their work is funded by the State's Council for Developmental Disabilities.

They talked to many self-advocates about what they need to get the movement going in their communities. They will use this information to develop a strategic plan. The plan will outline steps that self-advocates can take to get more people involved and work together for change.

Dear Cubby:

I'm dating a woman who says she likes to "love 'em and leave 'em!" I think she's going to leave me. Help!

— Nervous in Nashville

Dear Nervous: Maybe she's just joking. But if she really is going to leave you, dump her first!

Dear Cubby:

I live in a group home with silly rules. One rule is that I can't go on a date unless all the residents and staff come too. This is wrong! How can I change this?

— Crowded in Cloverdale

Dear Crowded: Tell staff you don't like this rule. Or see if your self-advocacy group can help you change the rule. If that doesn't work, ask your case manager if you can live on your own or with a roommate you choose.

Dear Cubby:

My husband won't let me go out with my girlfriends. I have to get his permission first.

— Tired of it in Texas

Dear Tired of it: First, tell him how this makes you feel and have a good talk about it. Maybe he is worried you will find someone else. If you can't work it out on your own, get help from a counselor.

The Pursuit of Happiness

By Nancy Ward

Rap: Christopher Gardner wants to be a broker and own his own firm. But after losing his wife, his home, and all his money, he and his son are homeless. Despite these problems, he works really hard and starts his own firm, making his dream come true.

Riot Rumble: People with disabilities are a lot like Christopher. We fight against great odds to make our dreams come true. Even our own families, who should believe in us, don't. We must show them that we can reach our goals.

Riot Rave: This movie is about a true story. It shows that if you believe in yourself, you can reach your goals. Never let anyone tell you that you can't make your dreams come true.

Quotes about Advocacy:

Justin Dart, Jr. was often described as the godfather of the disability rights movement. Below are some of the inspirational thoughts he wanted to share with self-advocates.

Can you find the UNDERLINED words hidden in the puzzle? Look from left to right, right to left, top to bottom, and bottom to top. Cross off each word as you find it.

- You have the POWER ~ LIVE the DREAM.
- Get INVOLVED in POLITICS as if your LIFE depends on it.
- PEOPLE from age one to a HUNDRED can be good ADVOCATES.
- I know what people need to do to really win FREEDOM. Get off our %$# and ORGANIZE.

Craig Says... “Self-Advocates NOT getting enough attention Stinks!”

Why am I cranky today? I am cranky because I watch the news on television EVERY night and NEVER see self-advocates on TV.

Have you noticed that too? Self-advocates don't get attention for the great things they do. Sure they show self-advocates on TV to make people feel sorry for them and put them on telethons to make money (Telethons stink!). But they don't show self-advocates talking to politicians, fighting for their right to vote, or trying to get rid of silly rules.

Self-advocates are working to remove the “R” word from laws and policies. Self-advocates are getting rid of silly rules. And younger self-advocates are working to have the history of people with disabilities taught in school. Is any of this on TV? NO! Do you read about it in newspapers? NO! Do you hear about it on the radio? NO! Well, I'm here to tell you that NO, isn't good enough! And it stinks!

Self-advocates are PEOPLE first! The PEOPLE deserve to be heard! Self-advocates are doing great things and they deserve attention.

What do you want to do about it? How about getting some attention for the good work you are doing? Here are three things you can do.

1. Make a contact list of people who you'll tell about what you and other self-advocates are working on. Do you know a local reporter for your newspaper or TV station? Do you know someone in radio? Who do you know that can spread the word about self-advocacy?
2. Tell them all about your work. Tell them by calling them by phone or sending a letter or email. Keep in contact with all of them! Ask them to come and see out what you are doing.
3. See if you can get in the newspaper or on radio or TV. I don't want to be Cranky Craig when I watch the news or read the paper. I want to see a story about self-advocates on every page!

Self-advocates everywhere are tired of the “same old thing.” Look out—the self-advocacy train can't be stopped!
